ABOUT

Miniature iridescent glass vase with a tall cylindrical body and flared rim, decorated with a repeating feather-like pattern running vertically around the surface. The glass displays strong iridescence, shifting between blue, purple, green, and gold tones depending on the light. The form is balanced on a small circular foot. Created using controlled surface patterning and iridescent finishing typical of Sean O'Donoghue's studio glass work.

Sean O'Donoghue is an Irish studio glassmaker, working in Ireland, associated with the late 20th-early 21st century Irish studio glass movement. His work was produced in small-scale studio settings rather than factory production, with an emphasis on hand-blown iridescent decorative vessels.
