ABOUT

Black wrought iron rectangular coffee table with angled supports and a stretcher, completed with ceramic tile top. Fifteen matte finish tiles present a glossy multicolor composition of flowers in a vase. The creator's embossed mark is visible on the lower right. Preserved in great vintage condition.

Sensee was a Vallauris-based ceramic workshop active in the 1950s-1960s. Vallauris is a historic centre of ceramic production in southern France, with documented activity from the 16th century onward. From the late 19th century and especially after the Second World War, Vallauris became a major hub for artistic and decorative ceramics, combining traditional pottery with modernist design. During the Mid-Century, production in Vallauris expanded beyond vessels to include ceramic panels, tiled furniture, and architectural elements. Many workshops produced hand-painted ceramic tiles intended for integration into furniture, frequently mounted on wrought iron structures made by local metalworkers.
